Spend Less Than In Pre-War Years

Americans Save 20 Cents of Every Dollar Earned.

WASHINGTON. — Although they indulged in the biggest holiday buying binge in history, Americans still are not spending as much of their income as before the war, Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace reported.

In a year-end statement on the nation's economy, Mr. Wallace declared the outstanding feature of 1945 was "the resiliency with which the economy absorbed the shock of the sudden end of the war."

Production totaled 96 billion dollars and the national income was 169 billion dollars, he said, both figures only slightly below the 1944 totals.

One factor which bolstered business after the swift drop in government spending for war, the secretary noted, was the public's "shift from saving to consumption."

As the year ended, the average individual was saving 20 cents out of every dollar of his income after taxes, Mr. Wallace said. In the first half of 1945 he was saving 30 cents.

Despite that shift from saving to spending, the proportion of income spent still has not reached the peacetime level, mainly because many goods and services were not available to buy.

If the goods had been on hand and consumers had used their money as in pre-war years, they would have spent from 115 billion to 120 billion dollars in 1945, which amounts to 10 or 15 billion dollars more than they did spend.

Mr. Wallace reported that the physical task of reconverting factories was largely finished, though the flow of new products remained small; that inflationary pressures continued strong but the cost of living remained stable, and that industrial employment had turned upward during the V-J Day layoffs.

"However, industrial disputes and labor unrest resulting from the reduction in take-home pay became serious problems as the year came to a close," the report continued.

"The solution of industrial disputes is not the only problem that confronts the nation in the coming months. Many of the difficulties of shifting to a peacetime economy had not fully emerged by the year-end."

Secret Wartime Plan On Penicillin Revealed

WASHINGTON. — A secret wartime research program undertaken in an attempt to produce penicillin synthetically was disclosed recently by Dr. Vannevar Bush, director of the office of scientific research and development.

Eleven chemical and drug firms, a number of universities and non-profit research organizations, United States government and British laboratories pooled their scientific information for two years in a co-operative effort to accelerate penicillin production. The program, directed by Dr. Hans T. Clarke of Columbia university, was started in 1943 and terminated November 1, 1945.

"Although this program, originally undertaken because of the then limited output of natural penicillin, did not result in the development of a commercially feasible method of synthesizing penicillin, it did result in substantial progress in a new and important field of medical research and disclosed several artificially produced penicillins of potential value," Dr. Bush said.

Hunt Graves of Yanks in Soviet Zone of Germany

FRANKFURT, GERMANY. — Three U. S. search and graves registration teams now are seeking missing American personnel in the Soviet zone of Germany through an agreement with Russia, U. S. army headquarters said.

The teams are operating in those parts of the Russian zone originally conquered by U. S. troops and later relinquished to the Russians.

Army authorities were unable immediately to estimate the number of men believed dead or missing in the Russian-occupied areas.

Bizarre Hanging Rule Officially as Suicide

BELMAR, N. J. — The strange death of Capt. Robert J. Wallace, 36, whose bejeweled body was found hanging in the closet of a boarding house room, has been termed a suicide.

A rosary and crucifix were suspended from the officer's neck, his legs were padlocked with chains, jeweled bracelets circled his arms and he wore earrings. No motive nor explanation for the jewelry has been determined.

Eliza Is Safe Now; Bloodhound Is Lost

AUSTIN, MINN.—Eliza won't have to worry too much about the bloodhound pursuing her across the ice in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" anymore. A road company presenting the pre-Civil war play here lost its dog. In its ad it described the animal as very friendly and answering to the name of "Mike."

Electric Finger Spots U-Boats

Radio Traced to Source by 'Huff Duff,' Device That Won Atlantic Battle.

WASHINGTON. — The wartime secret of "huff duff," an electronic ship distance detection device which played a major part in winning the battle of the Atlantic, has been disclosed by the navy, says the Associated Press.

Technically called high frequency direction finder (the initials HF-DF rapidly became "Huff Duff" in service slang), the electrical "finger" on spot a ship or a plane halfway around the world.

It was used as a teammate of radar and sound devices which spot objectives only at a shorter distance. The new tool told how the device on board ships, planes, and in a network of more stations succeeded in breaking up U-boat packs before they could assemble and how it helped one of the submarines which landed saboteurs on the Long Island and Florida coasts in 1942 was located and sunk before it could escape.

The device picks up voice or code radio signals transmitted on the international shortwave communications channels and shows the direction of the signal's source visually within a split second.

Works Rapidly.

When two or more "huff duff" units adorn or afloat get such bearings, it is a simple mathematical exercise for a control center to determine where the lines of direction meet on the earth's surface. This is accurate within a few miles when attained at long distance and can be made even more accurate by the flow of new products remained small; that inflationary pressures continued strong but the cost of living remained stable, and that industrial employment had turned upward during the V-J Day layoffs.

"However, industrial disputes and labor unrest resulting from the reduction in take-home pay became serious problems as the year came to a close," the report continued.

"The solution of industrial disputes is not the only problem that confronts the nation in the coming months. Many of the difficulties of shifting to a peacetime economy had not fully emerged by the year-end."
